'A beautiful and touching production that speaks across the generations - long may it continue to be seen!'

Roxie Curry / Shoreditch Audiences

'Ragroof Theatre's 'Shall We Dance?' was a delightful climax to the National Theatre's 2006 Watch This Space season. Witty, moving, energetic and well executed, it reiterated Ragroof's reputation for creating unusual outdoor theatre'

Angus MacKechnie / Watch This Space Producer

As the band strikes up and the glitter-ball twirls, the bandstand is brought to life by glamorous dancing couples from the roaring twenties through to the thrifty fifties. Get ready to enjoy the Charleston, Waltz, Tango, Foxtrot and Jive.

'Shall We Dance?' Is a show designed for bandstands, inspired by the memories of local older people about dance and their dance partners. The audience are transported back to a time when the intricate rituals of courtship were played out on the dance floors of village halls and grand ballrooms alike. As one costume is peeled off to reveal another, the music races through years gone by. Newly composed soundscapes, entwined with old favourites and interspersed with recorded memories, deliver a memorable soundtrack for a visual feast.
